

PHILOSOPHY

What can we know?

What should we want?

Out of wonder, philosophers have critically investigated a wide spectrum of issues, addressing individual, social, and global concerns to understand life and the natural world, so that we might know how best to live with one another. These inquiries have instigated questions about ourselves and the natural world, making way for the various sciences.

Philosophy enables one to examine critically the assumptions, ideas, and perspectives we inherit through enculturation, so as to understand how best to live in an ever-changing world.
